Adams is reported to have been the first to recommend the use of blue glass, but they were at first more widely used in Germany, chiefly through the recommendation of the great oculist Grafe, of Bohm, and others. The blue color of glass is chiefly to be recommended because it absorbs those rays in their passage which belong to the yellow and orange portion of the spectrum, in which the greatest brightness and greatest heat are concentrated, and the eyes, especially weak ones, consequently greatly protected by the blue color, while rays which such eyes are able to

Still greater is the progress recorded in the manufacture and hardness of "smoked" glass, also used for protecting the evesight. This kind of glass, which is colored gray or mouse colored by the addition of manganese, formerly suffered from too great softness by the addition of a large quantity of lead; but the best mannfactures now made are nearly equal to white glass in point of hardness. The object of smoked glass is to gating colors.—Chambers' Journal.
